

Cover Your Assets is one of our go-to games! Everyone of all ages enjoys it. It's easy to catch on and is about 20-25 min per round. There is some strategy involved as you work to protect your cards while stealing assets from the other players. It's always a lot of fun!

Euchre is an Indiana tradition that has been a family favorite since I can remember. It embraces team competition, while allowing everyone to socialize in a pretty intimate setting.

I really like Exploding Kittens as it's a fun game to play with friends that harms no kittens in the process. It's pretty quick to learn how to play and has a good bit of humor involved in the cards as well. Great for casual game nights or meeting new people (results may vary with cat lovers).

Silver Amulet is a fast, 2-4 player memory/car matching game of trying to get the lowest total in your hand. Fun, easy, and fast to play, it has become my entire group's favorite game to play.

I love games that involve many people, especially collaborative ones. One Night Werewolf will also help you figure out which of your friends are the best at lying and getting away with it.

Avalon is a social deception game, and I think those are really good for team building. There are also various characters that can be added, so it can be good for people who aren't familiar with board games or people who play all the time.

I recently played Chronology with a few other members of our team and found it to be not only extremely fun but educational (in a geeky way). It'll have you saying "Really? That long ago?"

I like Munchkin because it's humorous and wacky, very competitive, and has some rule-breaking opportunities that keep things unpredictable. It takes an hour or two to play, which means a couple of games fit nicely in an evening.

I watched a youtube series called "Tabletop" with Wil Wheaton, and he and his friends played Coup and it looked fun. There aren't a lot of parts and pieces but it has a lot of levels of trust and deception and strategy that makes it fun.
